This is a disturbing, frightening allegation. "I was shocked at what happened. I thought they were going to class together," said McDonough's school secretary, Bethany Passera. Students say their teacher molested one of them and tried to cover it up by pretending to choke him, but eventually he was arrested. "She touched him, yeah. She was holding his neck and she was trying to strangle him," said one student who was at the scene. "Her neck went back and forth, and I thought she was going to choke the boy," said another student. District Attorney John Molinelli says the teacher and student were going to class together, but while they were in the hallway between classes, he says the student realized what was going on and came over to his teacher, and they both ran off. "I think this is a felony type of offense. For a teacher to do that, that is against their responsibility of a teacher," said Molinelli. His office says the teacher and student are adults, but the student is still a minor. The alleged victim's parents say they have had to come to terms with their son's realization that he was being sexually abused. "I'm
